

The University of Hong Kong Graduate School

HKU Research Skills Development Course, Semester 2, 2012-13 (March 13 - 16, 2013)

Given the success of the summer programme International Research Skills Development Programme jointly organized with Imperial College London (Imperial) and a mainland university since 2009, the Graduate School is offering a 3-day residential Research Skills Development Course during the Reading Week of Semester 2. The course is based on the award winning transferable skills programme regularly run at Imperial and will be taught by HKU tutors.

Aims

The primary purpose of the course is to enhance both the personal and research effectiveness of participants. The course offers a wonderful opportunity for the development of awareness and skills which are significant for students' postgraduate study, career and whole person development. Furthermore, it exposes students to a new learning environment, meet people from different disciplines and cultural backgrounds and have fun!
